World War I, the “war to end all wars,” officially ended when the Treaty of Versailles was signed on June 28, 1919. But fighting between the Allies and Germany had actually stopped several months before when an armistice, or temporary truce, was established. The armistice began at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month—November 11, 1918. One year later, on November 11, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed the first Armistice Day to commemorate the anniversary of the end of the Great War. An act approved by Congress in 1938 made it official—November 11 was declared a federal holiday.

Armistice Day was dedicated to honoring veterans of World War I and promoting the cause of peace in the world.

Unfortunately, World War I was not the war to end all wars. In 1945, a World War II veteran named Raymond Weeks suggested that Armistice Day should honor all veterans, not just those who had served in World War I. Weeks’ idea for a nationally recognized Veterans Day gained the support of General Dwight D. Eisenhower, who had commanded the Allied Forces. Weeks led the first celebration of Veterans Day in his home state of Alabama in 1947, and in 1954, President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed the bill officially changing Armistice Day to Veterans Day—honoring all those men and women who had served honorably in World War I, World War II, and by then, the Korean Conflict.
